

Creating the perfect school

- The perfect school would be a school that helps me grow as an intellectual and also an individual.
 - Probably have a lot of luxury stuff in this school.
 - Stuff like open campus, netbooks and just open access to technology and resources.
 - Bowling alleys or pools or....
 - I would have cafeterias where you could order your own food based on what you wanted that day.
 - I would want the school to help me grow, to be a better person.
 - A Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.
 - I think that in the school of the future and if I could just wave in a magic wand and everything would be perfect, it would be really great if the teachers could have like magic duplicates because they're always running on the classroom trying to answer everybody's questions and it always looks like it's really hard because they're ---- between the chairs and get to everybody and try and make everybody know what they're doing.
 - In the perfect school of teachers would feel like really nice and open-minded But they had like magical doppelgangers. They could cover twice as much or thrice as much of whatever space and the allotted amount of time and if they also have like teleportation, well, that would be awesome.
 - In the perfect school, teachers would videotape their lessons and post them online so that students could access the lessons wherever they go and whenever they need to.
- In the perfect school classrooms would be smaller and the students would be able to connect with each other in the teacher on a more one-on-one basis.
- Coach and teacher would treat their kids as people and get to know them better as a person so that they can achieve more in the classroom and on the field.
 - But also, you know, helping the students find where they want to go and what they're really interested and then helping them harness their skill sets instead of just focusing on towards teaching to a standardizing test or the SAT they've invested. More just focusing on making sure that they understand everything and making sure they're confident, every single student in every single class is confident.
 - In the perfect school, students would be assessed on how they can make connections from the materials in the classroom to the real world.
 - Actually, they'll just all be online. It all be online you can just do it from your computer at home.
 - Definitely see many more languages offered in a perfect school, especially some more, perhaps, classical languages, which is on what I've always found interesting and just giving students more choices from everything not just foreign language and allowing them to do what they want you in bet best express themselves.

- I would like to study a lot of dragons and different kinds of spells.
- I think music and technology is really good expressive thing, like, an expressive class, so I think we could have more classes like that and that, and art is a good one to do because it really helps you, you know, be more free and do more new stuff instead of being types of learning information that is kind of ended in the book.
- I think that we would need a lot more computer science classes because I think the world is going a lot more digital and I think that's going to keep happening towards as we go into the future.
- I think you would have like more of a choice of what you get to study.
- Something good is prepared for like life outside of school.
- A lot of drawing.
- And the perfect school even take like planning classes that would help you prepare for everyday life.
- You want to do, learn more about cultural music you could take a separate class and learn about cultural music.
- I think the perfect school we'd offer me no more classes that are tailored directly towards what you want to do in the future.
- I was just studying whatever I want. Me, personally, I would study world cultures 'cause I'm really into that.
- The science class just to go for medicine or pharmacy and if maybe we have more opportunities to have that, then we'd have a better idea of what we actually want to do going into college and there wouldn't be a bunch of changing majors.
- I guess music technology would probably be one. I know a lot of people that would be interested in doing like music production.
- But it would a personalized experience and more like one-on-one with teacher and student.
- You should get more field trips and real life experience.
- In the perfect school, they would also offer classes that go outdoors more and really go into the real world more rather than just stay confined to a classroom.
- I'd say the perfect school would hang around like a thousand kids about two-fifty per grade level and I think that would give it another opportunity for kids to have enough. I'm having enough number of kids to meet kids with similarities to their and they could build box together and become their friends and be comfortable throughout school.
- The learning environment would be very discussion-oriented and all the passes would really involve everyone communicating and they could share their ideas instead of everyone just being lectured at because then everyone there would be able to really share their ideas and communicate and everyone would be involved.

In the perfect school, there would be a lot more freedom.

- Like you can set up classes where they only meet on certain days, make up set for longer periods of times, so students could late say have like Thursday or Friday off or something, but then go to school longer for the rest of the days depending on how they want to set up their schedule.

- School that there was very diverse not just economically but also racially and not just black and white, like, I would want people from Europe and Asia and Native American and Spain and just from all over the places together in the school.

- School would embrace the technology that students already carry and encourage them to utilize what they have at their disposal and just make it something that the students are almost limitless in their possibilities.

- This school would have no bullies at all and no cliques, everyone would just get along together and we just all be like kind of one big family.

- I think it was like to go to my perfect school.

- Well, I think the future is kind of unpredictable, you know, you never really know what would happen, so I'm just kind of excited to see ---

- I wouldn't change anything I wouldn't ----
