Jeanine Amapola: [...] When you're traveling, always compare Uber versus Lyft because each one has different rates. So, Lyft may be cheaper or Uber may be cheaper, so don't just settle for one, definitely have both apps because they do have different rates and one may have a price search at one time when the other one may not. So, always check both of these before getting the ride. If you're traveling abroad, always take a picture of your passport or print out a physical copy because you never know what can happen: you could lose it, someone could steal it, you never know. So, always print out a little extra copy or at least have some sort of, like, picture of it on your phone because you just never know. When you're traveling, always let your bank know that you're traveling abroad. So, I'm signing with Wells Fargo, so I'm always able to let them know that I'm traveling abroad and you can pick which credit card you're bringing with you. This way, if you travel abroad and you don't let them know, then they might think that someone stole your credit card and flew off to different countries trying to charge you. So, always let your bank know by calling them or doing it online. So, I definitely let my bank know that I was traveling abroad I love to know which cards I was bringing. That way they don't cancel your card when you're abroad because that would be so bad if they did [...].
